

How to make your own Kislevites

The main reason why I wanted my own kislevite Miniatures was an article written by Michael Perry, which was released in White Dwarf and re-released in Best of Town Cryer. In this article Michael described how to create a kislevite warband with just the Mordheim Militia Sprue, some Green stuff and lots of imagination. I was so fascinated by this kislevite minis that I decided to build my own kislevites. But I didn't want to copy Michael Perrys Kislevites, no I wanted my very own warband. Once a day, while searching through Games Workshops Mail Order archives (which is one of my favourite leisure amenities ;o)) I found the Miniatures of the Kislevite Horsemen Archers. I nearly forgot about them because in WFB 6 they are not included in the Imperial Army (which is my favourite army). In this moment the idea about using this models for my Kislevite Warband rose. There is a wide variety of Horsmen archers available: with swords, with bows, with furcaps, with plaits etc. And the best of all is that the modells consist of three main parts: upper part of the body, legs and horse and that you can order them separately. So I ordered a lot of Kislevite horsemen Archers upper body parts (I'm shure the Mail Order Troll who packed my order thought I'm a lunatic...), some green Stuff, an Empire militia Box, Middenheimer Accessory Sprue and the Mordheim Accessory Sprue.

After deciding which parts from the various sprues I would use for the models and separating them from their sprue I filed the chosen parts carefully. I then started to put the parts together: first of all I glued the Legs from the Empire Militia sprue to the base and then attached the Horsemen Archers upper part to the legs. Then I took a furcoat from the Middenheimer Accessory Sprue and glued it on the kislevites shoulders. Now the Green Stuff comes into action: I formed a rolled out piece of Green stuff and used it to built up the furcoat around the shoulders. Using a needle (yes, a needle!) I formed the structure of the fur to the green stuff. I then added a brooch made from the skull of the Empire Soldiers Shield emblems (the cross with the skull inside). Then I added some interesting details like a pistol halter and a pouch from the Mordheim Accessory sprue and a feather from the Empire Soldiers sprue. As soon as the Green Stuff dried out I undercoated the Modell with black paint. Finally I painted the Model. Another Version is to create the Kislevite Warrior only with plastic parts (which is a little bit cheaper).
